U.S. Plans Firm Economic Stand at Ottawa Summit

Reagan Prepares Counterattack Against European Pressure to Ease High Interest Rates

By Hobart Rowen

and Lou Cannon

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President Reagan will stand firm against European pressures for a change in U.S. economic policy at the Ottawa summit July 19-21, arguing that it is in Europe's best interest for the United States to pursue a tough, anti-inflation

Although the agenda lists only economic issues. White House aides have set a political objective as well. Because the assassination attempt forced Mr. Reagan to cancel a proposed trip to Europe this fall. Ottawa presents a chance for the president to meet with other world leaders, to convince them that he is comfortable dealing with foreign issues as

According to White House aides, Mr. Reagan has become sensitive to intimations that he does not have a foreign policy or that he is weak on foreign issues. As a result, he has spent a good part of each day this week boning up on the economic problems likely to come up in Ottawa.

The Canadian conference will bring together the leaders of the United States, Japan, West Germany, France, Britain and Italy in the seventh of a series that began in Rambouillet, France, in 1975.

Lavited to Paris

It will also provide the occasion for the first meeting between Mr. Reagan and President Fran-cois.Mitterrand of France, advocates of sharply different economic philosophies. The French Socialist, it was learned, has already extended an invitation to the other leaders to hold the eighth summit in Paris next year.

White House aides feel that the best possible political result in Ottawa would be establishment of a smooth working relationship with Mr. Mitterrand. There is less anxiety now at the White House over inclusion of Communists in the French Cabinet than there was at the time of Vice President Bush's recent visit to France. Mr. Reagan is understood to be avoiding any other statements that would irritate the French, and hopes that he and Mr. Mitterrand can come away from Ottawa with a "mutual under-

Whether this can be accomplished remains to be seen. "Mitterrand is a wild card for this summit," says a member of the U.S. team. "No one knows precisely what he will bring to Ottawa, but we know that Europe, and especially the French, are upset with high interest rates." In all probability, the French president will lay emphasis on the need to control rising unemployment in Europe by heavier government spending, a "Keynesian" approach rejected by the Reagan administration.

Mr. Reagan has been bracing himself for confrontation in Ottawa stemming from the depressed state of the European economy, which many blame on high U.S. interest rates. Aides say he is gearing up for a vigorous counterattack, in which he plans to assert that the United States also would like to see lower interest rates but has been "getting its fiscal house in order," just as the Europeans have summit is a diplomatic or vague communiqué

"People in glass houses shouldn't throw stones."
snapped one high administration official, noting that almost all of the European governments urging the United States to forgo a tax cut to reduce the federal deficit are themselves running a bigger deficit than the United States as a percentage of gross

There is a sense that the carefully laid plans for a quies discussion of wholly economic issues may be shattered by events along the Soviet-Polish border. The Central Committee of the Polish Communist Party is scheduled to meet shortly before the Ottawa summit. "As much as leaders want to focus on the big traditional issues of summits, like the economy and energy," said one presidential aide, "they also like to talk about timely things."

Officials say that if the Soviet Union makes an actual move across the Polish border, "contingency plans" have been made to deal with the situation. Sources said that the administration will sound out its partners at Ottawa on "a concerted approach," involving economic responses, if the Russians move inun Poland.

The first two days' sessions will take place in the relative isolation of Le Chateau Montebello, a resort about 40 miles (65 kilometers) east of Ottawa. On the final day, the leaders will return to Ottawa for one more session, issuance of the communique, and a joint press conference.

Despite the potential for conflict and controversy, what can be expected at the end of the Ottawa and one much shorter than in the past six years — using compromise language. Myer Rashish, under-secretary of state and the president's representative for summit preparation, said: "There will be no concrete conclusion, no numbers in the communique, no specific policy agreements.

Many participating governments believe that in several past summits, the communique-drafting process overwhelmed what should have been the main product, greater personal contact among the heads of government. Mr. Rashish and his fellow advance men for the Ottawa summit have con-sciously tried to provide instead a milieu for personal relationships among the seven leaders. This was the original design of economic summitry, as envisioned in 1975 by former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France.

Mr. Rashish says that creating the opportunity for a tour d'horizon by all the participants, rather than getting into details, is all the more important this year because it will be the first summit for four of them, including Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mitterrand. Other neophytes are Japanese Premier Zenko Suzuki and Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini. The veterans are West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and the host, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau. Also present will be Gaston Thorn, president of the European Commission.

British Parliament Erupts Over Rioting

By R.W. Apple Jr.

New York Times Service LONDON - The House of Commons erupted in a storm of hitter recrimination Thursday following a sixth night of urban violence, with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher forced to shout to make herself heard over the taunts of leftist critics.

While Labor members of Parliament denounced her for "ripping away the fabric of out society," as one of them put it, members of her own Conservative Party demanded tougher law-and-order measures to end the wave of rioting, looting and attacks on the police in inner cities. One Conservative member, John Carlisle, demanded that troops equipped with water cannons, plastic bullets and tear gas be deployed at once. "We are now considering what other equipment the police may need, and the use of water cannon is certainly not ruled out," the prime minister said, but she gave no sign of a willingness to use

4-Hour Strike Stops Poland's Airline Traffic

New York Times Service

WARSAW - In a second successive day of token strikes, about 6,000 employees of the state air-line, LOT, suspended work for four hours Thursday morning in a dispute arising over a demand that they be allowed to elect their own general manager.

The protest, believed to be the first strike affecting civil aviation in the Soviet bloc, caused the can-cellation of eight domestic flights and delay or cancellation of 14 international flights, strike organizers said.

The action, coming on top of a one-hour walkout by 40,000 dockworkers on Wednesday, raised fears that labor unrest might be starting up again just as the Communist Party is preparing for an emergency congress next week to consider changes in the party's statutes, leadership and overall

In another development, the Su-preme Court ordered the rearrest of three anti-Communist dissidents who are on trial for plotting the violent overthrow of the country's Communist system. The three, together with a fourth man on trial who was allowed to remain

The dissidents were released last On Wednesday night, the sixth month under a form of personal hunger strikes. It was sponsored by students, intellectuals and members of the Solidarity union, who argued that the dissidents were being persecuted for their political convictions.

The prosecutor requested their renewed detention in court last Tuesday, asserting that the defendants, oarticularly confederation leader Leszek Moczulski, had defied court instructions to refrain from political activity.

The prosecutor's demand was turned down by the presiding judge last week, who found that the defendants were complying with the conditions for their reed by the Supreme Court on Thursday.

Although the confederation does not enjoy Solidarity's support to the same extent as Poland's ior dissident organization, KOR, its appeal seems to be growing in certain regions of the country. The industrial region of Silesia, badly hit by shortages of food and other commodities, is a case in point. The confederation, known as KPN, espouses an openly anti-

The rearrest of Mr. Moczulski and his colleagues could be regarded as an attempt to assuage the So-viet Union, which has demanded stern action against "counterrevo-lutionaries." It could also come from a realization that he is more of a threat as an organizer outside of jail than as a martyr inside. In either case, the detention seems bound to resurrect a campaign for his release, which would raise the political temperature.

In the airline strike, the LOT employees were protesting the gov-ernment's refusal to accept Bronsilaw Klimaszewski, who was chosen as general manager in democratic elections among the employees under new procedures of self-management. The government claims that the authorities have the right to select the manager because the airline is part of the military establishment and must remain under direct state control.

The dispute seems nowhere near resolution. After the four-bour strike. Transport Minister Mieczysław Zajfryd installed a new general manager, the state's own can-didate, Brig. Gen. Jozef Kowalski, formet commander of the military aviation academy in Deblin,

The unions have vowed an allout strike on July 24 if the government does not back down.

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, concerned about continuing domestic and foreign hostility toward its involvement in El Salvador, is mounting a new offensive to build public support for its policy of backing the Salvadoran junta with U.S. arms, money and military advisers.

The new public relations effort is expected to open with a speech by the new assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, Thomas O. Enders. The State Department said Wednesday that Mr. Enders planned a speech on El Salvador soon. It is known that tentative plans are for him to give the speech before the Washington World Affairs Council within the next week or two.

According to administration sources, the speech, as contemplated, would have three main goals: to start building a constituency for the administration's policy among leaders of the U.S. foreign-policy establishment; to counter foreign suspicion that has been stirred up by criticism from the new Socialist government in France; and to give a new demonstration of support to the junta's civilian president, José Napolenn Duarte, who has been encountering increasing difficulties with El Salvador's right-

The idea had been opposed by some key administration officials, who think that the best approach is to continue a low profile on the Salvadoran situation to avoid renewed debate about whether the United States is supporting a repressive regime and beading toward a Viet-nam-type involvement. However, the sources said, the debate apparently has been resolved in favor of using the Enders speech as a vehicle for what is likely to be billed as "a major policy statement" on El Salvador.

Underlying the decision is an awareness of suspicion and concern among Americans about U.S. policy on El Salvador. That awareness, the sources said, has been reinforced by opinion polls and by the observations of adinistration officials who have encountered hostility to the policy on university campuses and who have found such groups as the business community unwilling to take a lead in supporting the policy.

Keeping Mum

In dealing with the criticism, the administra-tion initially took the tack, articulated most Haig Jr., that it was drawing the line against subversion in the hemisphere by the Soviet Union and Cuba. That effort only generated more controversy, particularly after a State Department white paper detailing alleged Communist aid in the Salvadoran insurgents was picked apart in press critiques for errors and inconsistencies

During recent weeks, the administration has said as little as possible about the situation. It even has put on the back burner, at least for now, a projected new white paper that had been conceived as justifying its evolving Carib-bean basin policy by detailing the extent of illeged Cuban and other Communist activity in the region.

from New York.

However, some administration officials be lieve that successful pursuit of U.S. policy goals in the hemisphere requires a new effort to build a domestic base of support. Those in this camp have argued that the time to start is now, when the university campuses are in sum-mer recess and when it might be possible to mobilize business and civic groups as a counterforce.

In addition, these officials are concerned about the Socialist French government of President Francois Mitterrand, which advocates a political solution to the Salvadoran civil war that would involve concessions to the leftists and could stir up anti-junta sentiment in West-

Finally, there is concern that renewed activity by the Salvadoran right could hamper Mr. Duarte's efforts to bring about promised re-forms, isolate him from the armed forces, on which support he depends for support, and make him vulnerable in overthrow. For that reason, some U.S. officials believe that a strong, high-level reiteration of Washington's support for Mr. Duarte is imperative now.

Advocates of this approach are understood to believe that a major policy speech, while pointing out anew the alleged Cuban threat, should downplay the rhetoric originally used by Mr. Haig and emphasize U.S. support for mocratic reform and economic progress in FI Salvador and the Caribbean.

U.S. Shifts Latin Rights Policy policy shift in a private letter dated July 1 from W. Dennis Thomas,

By Judith Miller

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, in an expression of its evolving human rights policy, has ordered U.S. delegates to the international development banks to support loans to Chile, Argentina, Paraguay and Uruguay. The new policy, which reverses that of the Carter administration, was based on a State Department determination that "there have been significant improvements in the human rights situation in those countries," according in a State Department spokesman.

The decision however, has stirred bitter criticism on Capitol Hill from human rights activists, including Rep. Thomas R. Harkin, Democrat of Iowa.

Congress Informed

The State Department declara-tion "is simply not true," asserted Rep. Harkin, the primary author of the 1977 law instructing U.S. delegates to international banks to oppose loans to countries that engage in "a consistent pattern of gross violations of human rights." The congressman added, "This decision quite clearly violates the spirit and letter of the law." Congress was informed of the has opposed all loans to Chile and has abstained on international loan proposals for Uruguay, Paraguay and Argentina. According to the State Department, American delegates to the international banks voted against or abstained during the Carter administration on 122 loans to 16 countries. However, Judith Jamison, public affairs adviser 10 the State Department's Bureau of Human Rights, noted that "the previous administration never formally designated any countries as falling within the defi-nition" of the 1977 law. "The department has reviewed the current human rights situation in Argentina, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay and has determined that they do not now fall within the standards that would require a 'no' vote or abstention on loans," Mrs. Jamison said, quoting official guidance prepared for the press.

According to the Treasury Department letter, delegates to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, International Finance Corp., and Inter-American Development Bank have been instructed to support $483.8 million in loans to the four countries pending this month. The IDB approved Wednesday a $126-million loan to finance highway construction in Chile.

Chile Criticized

The administration's decision to support the loans was denounced by Rep. Harkin, who noted that the four countries have repeatedly been criticized by international institutions for their human rights records.

In May, Amnesty International a London-based group that monitors human rights violations, issued a statement concluding that there had been a "marked deterioration" in the human rights situa-

Western partners is how to aid Third World countries. More generous government-to-government aid is advocated by most of the other participants, notably Mr. Mitterrand and Mr. Trudeau. In keeping with its general philosophy, the Rengan administration wants to pursue more of its foreign aid through the private sector.

Dependence Seen

Another area of tension is East-West policy. Mr. Reagan wants his partners to adopt stronger export controls on shipments of strategic materials to the Soviet Union, especially for oil and gas equipment. "We don't want to suppress trade with the Eastern bloc," Mr. Rashish said, "but we do want the sum-mit partners to control the transfer of strategic materials and technology.

The United States also worries that Soviet economic leverage is increasing because some Western European countries, notably West Germany, are becoming too dependent on Soviet supplies, such as natural gas from Siberia. These are issues that the Europeans would rather not face head-on; their economies depend heavily on maintaining a peaceful two-way trade with the East Bloc.

But the Reagan team would like the summit to focus more on such issues than on the so-called North-South problems dealing with the transfer of economic aid to the less developed world. Although last year's summit, at Venice, assigned to this one in Ottawa the task of evolving better North-South solutions, the Reagan preference is to leave those matters to the North-South summit set for Cancun. Mexico, in October.

Mr. Trudesn is making a last-ditch effort to keep the spotlight on North-South issues. He is expected to make one more try in a two-hour session with Mr. Reagan on Friday at the White House.

But Reagan aides are sticking to their plan. "We are not in a position to come up with new initiatives to help the poor countries," a State Department official said. "We have a problem hanging on to what we've got." This is a reference to the likelihood that once a $3.2-billion authorization for World Bank-subsidized loans runs out in 1983, the Reagan administration will have trouble getting a new "replenishment" through Congress.

The way things shape up, much of the time at the Canadian summit will be spent on the broad ecooomic issues, with Europe seeking relief from high interest rates and Mr. Reagan selling the virtues of supply-side economics worldwide. Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel says that the United States does not really expect to make converts, but hopes to convince the others that it will not change its

Although the United States would like to de-emphasize North-South issues, Mr. Reagan will not be able to avoid a discussion of his administration's disavowal of the Venice summit's proposal for an energy affiliate of the World Bank to help develop indigenous energy sources in the Third World. Reaganites do not like the energy affiliate, claiming the job could be better done by the private sector.

But in its final summit preparations, the Reagan administration reached a compromise between Treasury officials, most adamant against the energy affiliate, and its supporters. The new 'positive approach" policy, to be explained at Ottawa, rules out additional U.S. money contributions to the World Bank for this purpose, but invites the lending agency to expand energy development by finding ways of getting a "higher multiplier" out of existing

More broadly on energy issues, the communiqué is likely to stress the need for further reduction in oil imports, coupled with an endorsement of the International Energy Agency's recent warning that conservation efforts should not be relaxed because of the present oil glut.

On trade, the administration will try to support free-trade principles, defusing if possible bitter sentiment in Europe toward Japan for its penetration of consumer and industrial markets. The United States supports the view that Japan must open up its own markets to Western goods. But it wants to keep the communique language very general, espousing anti-protectionist principles, and avoiding any hostile language toward its key Pacific area

PARIS — The president of the French employers' association said Thursday that the Socialist government's nationalization program was "uscless, costly and dangerous for France."

Khomeini Orders Courts To Crack Down on Rebels

Central Charge

The policy advocated by Abol-hassan Bani-Sadr, the former president and commander in chief, of rehabilitating suspect officers to bolster Iran's war effort prompted one of the central charges leveled against him by his Moslem fundamentalist enemies.

Mr. Bani-Sadr was dismissed as commander in chief on June 10. Ayatollah Khomeini resumed the title of supreme commander and handed over effective control of the military to Gen. Fallahi.

The anti-leftist crackdown followed Mr. Bani-Sadr's dismissal from the military post and the presidency. His whereabouts are not known.

The pressure on the leftists increased after the June 28 bombing of the dominant Islamic Republican Party's Tehran headquarters in which 72 leading politicians were killed.

Meanwhile, the Islamic Republi-can Party newspaper said Thurs-day that the party would publicly support Premier Mohammed Ali Rajai as its candidate for president in the July 24 election to replace Mr. Bani-Sadr.

The Interior Ministry said that 70 other candidates signed up to run in the election, the newspaper rpeorted. But each aspirants must approved by the 12-member Council of Guardians, which is empowered to veto any contender who fails to meet the constitution-

One Picture Is Worth a Thousand ...

United Press International INDIANAPOLIS - Pictures can be worth more than the film they are made on, despite printed warnings by makers and processors of photographic film obligating themselves only to replace lost or damaged film, the Indiana Court of Appeals has ruled.

The state court Wednesday upheld a municipal court award of $1,013.60 plus interest and costs for John R. Carr Jr., an Indianapolis lawyer, for the loss of four rolls of film containing pictures from a 1970 family vacation in Europe. Eastman Kodak and Hoosier Photo Supplies filed cross-appeals contending that Mr. Carr should recover only $13.60 - the price of four film rolls before exposure.

The opinion written by Judge V. Sue Shields said "both Hoo-sier Photo and Kodak must be aware that when film is given to them to be developed it has photographic images on it and that in almost every case these images will be more valuable than the exposed film."

The state court said the wording in the disclaimer print-ed on each roll of film was such that it did not apply to Hoosier Photo and was too ambiguous to protect Kodak.

Mr. Carr brought in nine rolls of exposed film to Hoosier Photo and got prints back for five. He sued Kodak and Hoosier Photo for $10,000 for the four tost rolls. The appeals judges said the lower court used proper discretion in awarding Mr. Carr less than the cost of his trip, since the trip was not made just to take pictures.

Carter Criticizes Broad Range of Reagan Policies

By Marlene Cimons Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON - Former President Jimmy Carter has made his first full-scale attack on the Reagan administration, calling its cuts in federal spending an "abrupt departure" from a national commitment to Americans "not strong enough" to help themselves.

In a July 3 letter to members of his Cabinet and his senior White House staff that was made public Wednesday, Mr. Carter criticized President Reagan for his stands on the environment, human rights and arms control, in addition to the budget curs.

"Some of the proposals now considered by the Congress are an abrupt departure from the com-mitment of our nation to a better and productive life for Americans not strong enough or able enough to win these opportunities for themselves," Mr. Carter wrote. "Also, an enormous transfer of government benefits is now taking place from the very poor to the very rich, and middle-income Americans will ultimately have to pay a substantial portion of the

Concerning Uruguay, the State Department spokesman said that about 1,100 persons in Uruguay claim the status of political prison-er. Nevertheless, "there have been very few new arrests and convictions in recent years," the statement continued

Nationalizing in France

Without surprises but with obvious delight, France's first Socialist prime minister in 23 years delivered his program to the National Assembly Wednesday. His presentation was frequently mocked by the opposition, but time after time the Socialist majority drowned out the conservative hecklers. The new order has arrived in France. Wednesday's performance eliminated any possibility of doubt that might have remained.

Pierre Mauroy elaborated the entire Socialist legislative program with special attention to the economic keystone of President François Mitterrand's plan - nationalization. As expected, 11 industrial companies and a number of private hanks have been slated for government takeover.

The details of the acquisitions remain to be disclosed, but the broad outlines are now in place. The hanks will go first. Then two profitable defense industries and two staggering steel companies will follow. After that, four large concerns that are substantially Frenchowned and, ultimately, three whose shares are in large part foreign-held. In each case, Mr. Mauroy said, the government will expect the companies "to act on their own initiative at the national level as well as on the international level." In form, at least, the Socialist program takes account of the sensitivities of the Freech and the international financial communities.

For money men almost everywhere, nationalization is synonymous with inflation and economic disorder. The major French hanks, Air France and Renault are always cited as examples that it need not be so. And they are good examples. But mentioning them begs the real question. It doesn't matter who owns an enterprise, but how it is run and to what end. If Mr. Mitterrand's Cabinet appointments are a guideline, there is every reason to expect that the nationalized concerns will be run professionally. But the president and his prime minister have already spelled out a series of goals that are not necessarily consistent with one another, with reducing the French inflation rate, or even, perhaps, with creating jobs, which is one of the stated objectives.

Along with generating employment, the Socialists are taking over the arms industry for ideological reasons. They are interested in stimulating research and development, in improving the quality of working life, and, in the banking sector, in redirecting credit to small and medium-size businesses. Each of those goals is likely to increase government spending, thereby feeding inflation. That, in turn, could dampen productivity, causing stagnation throughout the economy and eventually leading to protectionism.

The conservative French daily Le Figaro said in an editorial Thursday: "The art of governing consists first in distinguishing that which is possible from that which is not, that which re-establishes social justice from that which ruins a country." Mr. Mitterrand is about to learn what every victorious politician must — that governing makes getting elected look easy.

A Cruel Joke on Taiwan

A mischievous game is being played by those in Washington and Taipei who speak of "upgrading relations." Ostensibly they mean only to ensure that the United States ahides by the pledge it made after it normalized relations with China - to provide, in the language of the Taiwan Relations Act, "adequate safeguards for Taiwan's security and well-being." If this were all, no one could complain. On the contrary, given the feelings about Taiwan in America, people would probably applaud.

But it isn't all. "Upgrading relations" has become a code phrase for something different. In Taiwan, where officials have just said they have received signals that the administration will upgrade relations, the phrase betrays an intent to make trouble between Washington and Peking. The officials are well aware that Washington, in normalizing relations with Peking, made relations with Taipei unofficial. "Upgrading" even symbolically — by raising the number of Chinese "liaison offices" or making contacts between representatives more formal - is seen as a way to erode normalization. Selling Taiwan super-hot new warplanes for which no feasible military case has been made could be similarly exacerbating.

In Washington, meanwhile, "upgrading" is at once a bow to Mr. Reagan's core belief and constituency and a thumb in Peking's eye, the better to give Peking to know that U.S. cooperation is strictly husiness.

In fact, as most of the professionals now accept, "upgrading relations" with Taiwan cuts across the U.S. interest in both Peking and Taipei. To antagonize Peking gratuitously just as strategic cooperation is being deepened is a reckless inconsistency. Nothing could do more to close Peking's opening to Washington and to undercut its current friendly leadership than to act in a manner feeding charges that Deng Xiaoping has "sold out" on Taiwan.

The best way to make good on the U.S. commitment to Taiwan is to hold firm in avuncular patronage and to encourage the island's moderate mainstream, which is coming to see its future in a context of peaceful cooperation with the mainland. Already there is trade worth hundreds of millions of dollars a year. It is a cruel joke, as well as a political error, to substitute a chimerical "upgrading of relations" for the real support that Taiwan's "security and well-being" deserve.

A Corporate Elopement

produce a company that would be at once the largest chemical producer in the United States and the second largest coal producer. It would be the ninth largest oil company, and a leader as well in biological and medical technology. Would that violate the antitrust laws? Ten years ago the answer would have been almost automatically yes. Today it may be otherwise. For those products, it is no longer the national market that is the proper measure, hut rather the world. On a world scale the trade in chemicals, oil and the rest is pretty competitive, and not even Super Du Pont could really be called dominant.

Du Pont's management has taken a rather daring — and certainly expensive — step to rescue Conoco from Canadian ownership. The enormous increases in oil prices have left most of the oil producers loaded with cash;

A marriage of Du Pont and Conoco would that has made them attractive targets for takeovers, unless they spend their money taking over someone else. In this case a Canadian distilling company, Seagram, sold its oil and gas operation a year ago for more than $2 billion, and since then has been looking for ways to invest the money. When it began to move toward Conoco, Conoco hastily invited a friendly takeover by Du Pont.

That is fair enough. But, as part of its defensive campaign, Conoco has been trying to stir Congress into a reaction against the Canadian invasion.

When foreigners want to put money into the United States it ought to be encouraged, particularly when the investor comes from a country with a legal tradition and an open market similar to America's. Restricting foreign investment is a form of protectionism. THE WASHINGTON POST.

Progress: Quadrantectomy

Many women fear the treatment for hreast cancer as much as the disease. The once traditional "radical mastectomy" involves surgical removal of the entire breast, the muscles beneath it and the lymph nodes under the arm. Rather than risk so traumatic and disfiguring a procedure, countless women have avoided early treatment, permitting the irreversible spread of cancer.

In recent years, as women have demanded less extensive breast surgery where possible, and as scientists have learned more about the affliction, surgeons have become a bit more conservative. Today the preferred treatment is a "total" mastectomy, in which the entire hreast and lymph nodes are removed hut the major chest muscle, at least, is spared.

Now there is new evidence that for women whose cancers are small and detected early, a partial mastectomy, sparing most of the hreast, is just as effective. A study hy the Italian National Cancer Institute found no difference in cancer recurrence or survival between women who underwent a radical mastectomy and those who had a "quadrantectomy," in which only a quarter of the cancerous breast is removed, followed by radiation treatments.

Studies are under way in the United States to assess the effectiveness of an even less disfiguring procedure the "lumpectomy," in which only the tumor and a little surrounding tissue are removed.

The emerging data suggest that the medical profession ought to accelerate its switch to more conservative treatments.

NEW YORK - This will be chorus girls week in the Thaw-White murder case. It is currently reported that many young women of the stage have left the city to avoid undesirable ootoriety in connection with the case. Miss Mazie Follette and Miss Edna McClure, former "chums" of Mrs. Thaw, have given testimony that is oot favorable to the prisoner. Miss Follette declares that she heard Mr. Thaw say he would kill Mr. White if it took years to do it. Miss McClure was in the "Wild Rose" company with Mrs. Thaw, then Miss Nesbit, when the two men began pursuing Miss Neshit with attentions. Every night there would he two cabs waiting for Miss Nesbit and every night two bunches of flowers arrived.

MOSCOW - A café-restaurant situated 50 yards from the structure in which proletarian audiences are treated nightly to selections from Meyerhold's revolutionary stage repertoire provides the nearest thing to an after theater atmosphere to be found in Moscow. For a long time the Moscow government, with its flair for puritanism, frowned on anything so corrupting as late closing. But 2 a.m. closings have oow become general, and some establishments remain open until 4 a.m. To make sure that these bours do not lead to heavy drinking, the government is applying efficacious economic checks. Until 6 p.m. beer can be had for one ruble a glass, but at 6 p.m. the price increases to two rubles.

Whatever Democrats Say, Reagan Is Really There

WASHINGTON — Politically, the un-thinkable is happening everywhere: Italy, Israel, Poland, China, France, For-ger for the moment that we are talking about greatly different political systems. The common thread is there.

Whether the evidence is a failure of the Christian Democrats (for the first time in 41 postwar cabinets) to head up the Italian government, or the inability of Israel's Labor Party to stage a convincing come-back from what had been regarded as a fluke defeat last time, or the amazing strength shown by Polish Solidarity, or the French Socialists' upset sweep, or the dispossession of both Mao's legacy and his bureaucratic heirs - these must be accounted terrible days for governing establishments and orthodoxies.

They are terrible days, that is, for com-placent leaders who had thought they represented, in perpensity, a political mainstream from which all divergence must be minor and marginal.

Limitations

We do not need to waste time wondering if it can happen in Washington. It already did. In fact, I only take note of the larger trend because I think it is the con-text in which the blown-away Democrats need to consider their own condition. People think the '60s were radical. I think something far more radical is afont oow, a political impulse whose meaning and consequence are missed precisely to the ex-tent that we insist on thinking of radical as meaning "left" and being the opposite of conservative or "right."

Defiance of assumptions and expecta-oons and of the agreed-upon (it was thought) political boundaries within a society is now the norm. No one is more baffled by this than the displaced leaders who had dimly believed themselves to be entitled to their authority, and supposed that their countrymen generally accepted the limitations on their own freedom of action that this implied. Well - surprise! - everything turns out to be negotiable and vulnerable. There are some Democrats who are unsurprised by what has happened because they refuse to admit it.
This, I calculate, will prolong their exile from office at roughly the rate of one day lost for each day of self-delusion.

The basic all-important fact about the Reagan budget-cutting triumph (as a po-litical achievement, oot occessarily as an act of wisdom or beauty) is that there was oo opposition to it. Yes, there was resistance, some of it very sensible and impasBy Meg Greenfield sioned. But when Reagan pushed what was supposed to be the opposition, it collapsed. It simply isn't there. It has been retired or enfeebled or frightened by what it perceives to be the prevailing political opinion in the country. And yet you can still hear the scholastic arguments being put forth, breathtaking in their irre-

succeed now so that it can fail later. To some extent this rests on a cold-blooded calculation that the Reagan figures don't add up right and that the president needs to be seen getting his way and then going economically bust for people ever to reject his political message. There is also the hope that once people really see what the levance, that the Republicans and conservatives did not get a mandate for what they are doing now, that the whole business is somehow o gigantic mistake.

That — regarding their rout as the product of a terrible misunderstanding—is one response. Another has been to hope that the oew Reagan dispensation will new administration is up to they will come to their senses.

I think the second of these expectations is especially wishful. The upending of sev-eral decades worth of vaguely liberal, mid-dle-road orthodoxy, with all its attendant excesses in the name of policies no one troubled to examine anymore and its youwouldn't-dare approach to political chal-lenge, strikes me as being probably precisely the upcading that people had in mind when they made Reagan president and gave him a sympathetic Congress. Americans will tolerate a lot. They will olerate what they consider too much. When it gets to be way too much, they will throw you out. This is what happened to the now-displaced political establishment, and it does not bode well for its speedy and it does not be learned to be a possible would recovery, since the Reagan people would have to fail painfully and spectacularly and indisputably for the voters to run out of patience anytime soon.

I think what strikes those displaced persons as outrageous and beyond the politi-cal pale also doesn't seem so unacceptable to people generally. My point is that the first step required in the creation of an opposition is a willingness to oppose what is there — and that means (a) taking seriously both the results of the election and the policies being put forward by the winners, and (b) meeting their arguments head-on.

Variance

On the latter score, it is self-evidently not enough to try to hold up to ridicule a collection of government positions on the ground that they are at such great variground that they are at such great variance from one's own or from what one had expected everyone to believe. That time is gone. The greater the variance, in some cases, the greater the political appeal. Nor is it very clear what the Democrats would offer if it did come about that the Deanest sources and appeal are sources and appeal are appeals as a property would be a possess and appeals are appeals as a property would be a possess as a possess and a possess a possess and a possess a possess a possess a possess and a possess a possess a possess a possess and a possess a po the Reagan government vanished as quickly as Jimmy Carter's did. More of what went before? More of what helped to get them kicked out in the first place?

Chairman Jim Jones of the House Budget Committee, a sensible, moderate man if ever there was one, came up with a sensible, moderate budget alternative to Reagan's. There were not nearly enough takers to beat Reagan. That, along with other evidence, says to me that the Decoratic opposition will not be able to reconstitute itself by stitute itself by a kind of half-liberal alternative to Reagan or a threat to return to the governing traditions of the past two decades.

They are said to be "rethinking" things. I believe they should rethink big, meet Reagan's radical, anything-goes, hell-let's do-it approach with a comparable investmence — especially toward their own as sumptions and dogme. It's the only way to come back. Otherwise, they might go the way of Mao Tse-tung.

Thatcherism: A Specter Haunts Reagan's Washington

By Leonard Silk

NEW YORK — A specter is haunting the Reagan administration: Thatcherism.
The riots in Liverpool this week, stemming partly from the worst unemployment Britain has experienced since the Depression of the 1930s, are grim evidence of the failure of what was ooce regarded as a brilliant innovation in economic policy.

When Mrs. Thatcher became prime minister in May, 1979, she was the darling of conservatives on both sides of the Atlantic. Today she faces a revolt in her own party and been disowned by the Reaganites in Washington, who say she departed from and made a mess of what initially was a correct solution to the twin problems of inflation and industrial stagnation. But was her fault one of execution or were there inherent inconsistencies and contradictions in the Thatcher program that the Reagan administration is on the way to repeating?

The Thatcher plan certainly began with close parallels to the Reagan program:

• A commitment to "monetarism," the doctrine that holds that the way to stop inflation is to reduce the growth of the money supply to a rate equal to the potential growth of the economy, Mrs. Thatcher elect-ed to do this gradually: The Bank of England would cut the growth of the chosen monetary aggregate called "sterling M-3" — currency in circulation plus sterling-denominated demand and time deposits in commercial banks — to an annual rate of 9 percent in 1980-8t and to 6 percent in 1983-84. The real value of government spending - total outlays corrected for inflation was to be cut. The money the government occded to borrow from the public to cover its debts and those of local authorities and poblic corporations would be scaled down to £7 billioe in 1980-81 for openers. Marginal income tax rates would be cut sharply to spur savings and productivity growth, with the biggest cuts both absolutely and proportionately going to those in the igher income brackets.

How faithfully did Mrs. Thatcher carry this resulted largely from removing the so-called corset from the commercial banks, the special deposit regulations that had lim-ited the extent to which the banks could inthe their interest-bearing deposits. But the money supply narrowly defined, M-1, was held to 3-percent growth in the 12 months after Mrs. Thatcher took office and 8 percent thereafter. The clearest indication of tight money was the sharp rise in interest rates. The outflow of funds from London to New York, attracted by still higher interest rates, helped out her plan? On monetary policy she has striven to tighten up the money supply. It is true that sterling M-3 overshot its target, but tighten money further, despite government plans to make more funds available by bringing down public-sector borrowing. In this Mrs. Thatcher failed. She quickly put through cuts in marginal income tax rates, bringing down the top rate on compensation income to 60 percent from 83 and the bottom rate to 30 percent from 33. She cut the top rate on investment income to 75 percent from 98. To promote the shift from consumption to savings, she nearly doubled value added tax from 8 percent to 15.

Sharply rising interest rates pushed the economy into a deep slump, and the budget fell deeper into deficit. To curb the growing public borrowing requirement, the government raised excise taxes on tobacco, alcohol, gasoline, diesel fuel and road vehicles.

Government spending kept climbing, de-spite Mrs. Thatcher's efforts at belt-tightening. She imposed her steepest cuts on publio-sector investment items, thereby aggra-vating the problem of inflation. But instead of realizing her initial plan to bring down public borrowing to £7 billion in 1980-81, the Thatcher government ran its borrowing requirement up to £13.5 billion, or 6 percent of the gross national product, one of the highest levels in the world.

Thus Mrs. Thatcher's fundamental mis-take has been to try to care stagliation by combining tight monetary policy with loose fiscal policy. She has incurred big deficits that forced the government to be a heavy competitor for scarce private savings, forcing up real interest rates.

This has produced an extraordinary shump in production and employment. The jobless rate has doubled to more than 11 percent, from 5.4 percent when Mrs. Thatcher took office.

With the slump, inflation has fallen to low double-digit numbers, but the high interest rates on both government and private bonds reflect the pessimism of the financial markets about the prospects for solving the problem of British inflation.

The recent behavior of interest rates and the securities markets in New York reflects similar apprehension that the Reagan monetary and fiscal policies have more in com-mon with those of the Thatcher government than Washington is willing to acknowledge.

The writer is a staff correspondent of The Guardian, London, who en-tered Iran on June 25 with a 10-day visa but was served with an expul sion order a week later on July 2. He left Iran on the first available flight, on July 6, and subsequently filed this story.

TEHRAN - Iran's revolutionary teadership, never well disposed to the foreign media, seems close to declaring total war on them. It has announced its intention to close down the British oews agency Reuter, which, with Agence France-Presse, is the only major Western oews agency still operating out of Tehran.

The decision is a mark of the regime's deep insecurity after the ter-rorist campaign that has taken such a devastating toll in recent weeks. Few revolutions have had such a deep suspicion of the out-side world as Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's. Yet while affecting an outward indifference to world opinion, one senses that inwardly it craves the world's respect.

Failing, in their own judgment, to have secured it, the authorities have responded by refusing access to the overwhelming majority of journalists who apply for it. The process by which the regime admils the chosen few, and then permits them to remain, is a mysierious one. Merely to acquire or reoew a press card one has to present oneself at five or so different government departments in different parts of the city.

With the recent convulsions, Iran is moving toward a reign of terror in which a paranoid regime is less and less concerned with its reputation in the outside world, as it is molded by the few correspondents who are admitted, and more and more concerned with the impact they make on the domestic

Iranian arena. I happened to be one of the chosen few. My impression was that when the authorities last mouth granted me a 10-day entry visa, they had decided that, although during my previous visit I had written things they did not like, istry called me a "reporter" and that consideration was outweighed not a spy, amounted, in current not a spy, amounted, in current by what I had also written about Iranian terms, to a defense of my President Saddam Hussein of traq, professional credeotials. their opponent in an almost year-

The name David Hirst appeared to mean oothing in the banks or airline offices. It was only when I went to the police for my exit formalioes that the officer in charge smiled a smile of complicity as if to say, "Ah, the great spy, we have been expecting you."

It is no secret that the police, like much of the bureaucracy in-herited from the late shah, detest the parallel revolutionary bureaucracy to which they are obliged to

There are more signs of spontsneous friendliness in Iran than officially inspired xenophobia. But even those who go out of their way to befriend foreign "spies" in their midst can raise a moral dilemma to which there is probably no answer.

The party chairman, Charles T. Manatt, calling the special-election victory of Wayne Dowdy in Mississippl's 4th Congressional District a signal to wavering Democrats, said that "it is high time" some of the dissidents were disciplined by the House Democratic Cancos. But Mr. Manatt ran into a mixed reaction when he met later with Honse Democratic leaders. The majority leader, James C. Wright Jr. of Texas, said he and Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts were inclined "to be fairly tolerant" toward the Southem Democrats whose votes have given Mr. Reagan his victories on the early budget tests. The majority whip, Thomas S. The chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, Gillis W. Long of Lonisiana, said, however, that he would call a meeting of all House Democrats to consider a disciplinary motion proposed by Rep. Toby Moffett of Connecticut and other liberals.

Singled Out for Criticism

Mr. Manatt singled out for criti-cism Rep. Phil Gramm, a Texas Democrat who co-sponsored the budget resolutions Mr. Reagan and the Republicans pushed through the House over the oppo-sition of the Democratic leadership. Mr. Manatt said Rep. Graum had participated in strategy ses-sions of Budget Committee Demo-crats and then plotted actively with the administration to thwart his own party's position. Mr. Manatt called the Texan's behavior "an abuse of responsibility" and urged caucus discipline against Rep. Gramm and any other Democrat "with a consistent pattern of actions" against the party positions. But Rep. Wright suggested that disciplinary, action would have to wait, "In due course, at the beginning of the next Congress, we will elect people to committees," he said, and it is predictable that certain people will not be elected to leadership 'committees' such as Bridget Ways and Means or Rules. Prison Outing Lets Murderer Escape in U.S.

TRENTON, N.J. — Police were searching Thursday for a convicted murderer who vanished when inmates were taken on a beach outing as a special privilege for good behavior.

Rep. While this argument rumbled, Democrats celebrated their first victory in a previously Republican district since Mr. Reagan became president. The victory of Mr. Dowdy, 37, the mayor of McComb, over Liles Williams in a district the Republicans had held since 1972 was a distinct upset. Mr. Williams had led in the first primary, spent four times as much as Mr. Dowdy, and flooded the district with endorsements from

Mr. Reagan.
Mr. Dowdy, who criticized Mr. Reagan's proposed Social Security cuts and supported extension of the Voting Rights Act, won by an unofficial margin of 1,100 votes in a beavy turnout of 110,000. Reagan Urges Groups Opposed to Abortion To Avoid Judging O'Connor Until Hearings

By George Skelton

Las Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has urged critics of Sandra D. O'Connor's past legislative votes on abortion to keep an open mind until she ean testify at Senate hearings on her appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, Sen, Strom Thur-mond of South Carolina, the Judiciary Committee chairman and a conservative Republican, was predicting Wednesday that Mrs. O'Connor would be confirmed with relative ease. "I expect to sup-port ber." he said. "I would say the Senate will confirm her unless something comes up that we doo't know about."

The president expressed confidence Wednesday that Mrs. O'Connor would be confirmed as the Supreme Court's first woman justice, and he was reported by a spokesman to be pleased by the favorable reaction from members of both parties in Congress.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, Republican of Arizona, a friend and strong supporter of Mrs. O'Connor, was advised that the Rev. Jerry Falwell, head of the Moral Majori-ty, had annouoced he would attempt to bring Christians together to "turn their backs on" Mr. Reagan because of the selection. Sen. Goldwater remarked to a re-

California Watchdog Panel Charges Governor's Aides Altered Evidence

SACRAMENTO — A state commission bas accused leading aides of Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of destroying and altering evidence in a political-corruption probe. A criminal investigation of the staff was recommended.

Gov. Brown, a Democrat, was not named as a target of the recommended investigation, but at least a half-dozen top state and campaign officials were, as the Fair Political Practices Commissioo asked the district attorneys of Sacramento and Los Angeles counties Wednesday to conduct criminal investigations.

The watchdog commission created by a political-reform initia-

The commission's seven-month investigation stemmed from allegations that the aides had leased a computer with state funds and used it to compile political mailing lists. Among other things, the com-mission said in a 149-page report, a key memo was withheld from in-

Mr. Gergeo said there had been

He also said he did not anticipate major lobbying by the president because ber qualifica-tions are sufficiently distinguished. The controversy involving Mrs.

O'Connor centers around four votes she cast between 1970 and 1975 in the Arizona Legislature. According to National Right-to-Life Committee researchers, she voted for a bill to legalize abortion oo demand and another hill that could have led to abortions for minors, while voting against a measure urging Congress to adopt a constitutional amendment prohibiting abortions and a bill to ban abortions at the tax-supported University of Arizona Medical

Sen. Baker said that his proposal to cut off debate would have the effect of postponing consideration of the Johnston amendment until later in the session. Under the Senate rules, the amendment, which deals with the federal courts, would be ruled out of order since it is not germane to the legislation it would amend, the Department of Justice authorization bill.

A cloture vote, however, might not prevent further time-consuming parliamentary maneuvering over another anti-busing proposal, nsored by Sen. Jesse Hel North Carolina Republican. Congratulations on six World-Class Records

On Monday, June 15, 1981, Joachim, "Jo", Blumschein, businessman-pilot, claimed six new world-class performance records for business class propjet aircraft. The records were set in the following categories:

- ☐ fastest time-to-climb to 3,000 meters (10,102 ft.) in 2 minutes 12 seconds
- ☐ fastest time-to-climb to 6,000 meters (19,944 ft.) in 4 minutes 40 seconds ☐ fastest time-to-climb to 9,000 meters (29,786 ft.) in 8 minutes 08 seconds
- \square fastest time-to-climb to 12,000 meters (39,629 ft.) in 14 minutes and 00 seconds
- ☐ maintained level flight record at 13.777,0 meters (45,200 ft.)
- □ absolute altitude record of 14,325,6 meters (47,000 ft.).*

Jo Blumschein flew our Gulfstream Commander Jetprop 980, a standard aircraft for business flights. Once again his records prove that on average European middle-range flights the Gulfstream Commander is almost equivalent to fanjets in performance and flying time. However, it uses 50% less fuel.

Five of these records now broken were also held by earlier models of Jetprop Commander aircraft. The 12,000 meter record was set for the first time.

We extend to Mr. Blumschein and his BAT-Air Flugdienst GmbH at the Cologne/Bonn airport our best wishes for the future - may it be as successful as the past!

That was "First Class"!

Please send information material on the "Gulfstream Commander Jetprop".

Guitarists Strum Up Fête

By Michael Zwerin

International Herald Tribune PARIS — Although it is one of the most difficult of instruments to become a virtuoso on, a guitar is cheap, portable, self-sufficient and quiet, and, along with tennis, its popularity is one of the few things that widely differing political systems have in common.

The ninth annual "International Guitar Meeting" takes place July 12-26 in the southern French town of Castres, about 43 miles (70 kilometers) west of Toulouse. This is Albigensian country, ancient Occitania, where the troubadors were accompanying their sophisticated poetry with lutes while Parisians were still living under rocks. Castres now calls itself "The Guitar Capital of the World,"

The festival's producer, Frenchman J. Robert Vidal, often referred to as "Mr. Guitar," runs smaller guitar festivals in places like the Indian Ocean island of Réunion, and he was the founder of one of the world's first international guitar competitions, for Radio France, 22 years ago. He plays

Their vehicle is a broad spoof of the figures that roam Raymond Chandler's detective noveis. Each plays many parts during the hour's course, including the lone-wolf private eye, the moron underworld goon who threatens him, the headquarters inspector who resents his interference, the voluptuous wife of a senile millionaire whose stately mansion has an idiot butler, the stripper who retains her black stocking in which a pearl-handled revolver is concealed.

'Wonderland': Flawed Caricature of Hollywood

By Sheridan Morley

International Herald Tribune

T ONDON — The fact that we have had within the last year no less than three small-scale musicals about prewar Hollywood suggests that somebody somewhere must think they are a good idea; the fact that only one of the three (Dick Vosburgh's joyous "A Day in Hollywood, a Night in the Ukraine") has actually worked suggests that they are more difficult to achieve than might at first appear.

The latest flicker singalong, at the King's Head in Islington, is William Fairchild's "Wonderland," in some respects the most ambitious of the three (the other, in case you'd forgotten, was last antumn's "Biograph Girl") but also the most deeply flawed. Fairchild is not in the straight nostalgia business; instead, in a two-hour show set in California and Europe between 1938 and 1945, he attempts to define both Hollywood at war and the career of one Niven-type English actor of that period.

Either theme might have made a show: The idea of the English in Hollywood, their last real empire-building achievement in the 1930s, has always been an attractive one, while the still greater lunacies of wartime filming should prove an equally promising

The trouble with "Wonderland" is that it shoots for both and fails to hit either anywhere near the center. Fairchild, to judge from a brillant program note that is the best thing about the entire evening, reached Cali-fornia in the early 1960s, by which time all the rules had been changed. If he had written his show, as he has written his note, about ins show, as he has written his note, anothing the hilarities of trying to make a film of the life of Gertrude Lawrence, he might have been onto a winner, which is more than the film itself ("Star!" 1968) ever was. Instead, for reasons not entirely clear, he has gone back 30 years earlier to a period of California history largely unknown to him.

"Wonderland" rapidly falls victim to the Hollywood musical disease, a curious wasting affliction that causes the patients to try simultaneously to celebrate and satirize vaguely remembered clichés of 1930s celluloid. you can imagine "42nd Street" rewritten in a hurry by Julian Stade you will have some idea what Dave Brown's score sounds like, and Fairchild, to put it mildly, is no great lyricist. As a result, even an intentionally serious number sounds like a highlight from one of the shlock operas they are sending up. and the cast seems equally unable to sort out

Toward the end there is a curious hurch into political satire as the studio boss turns out to be a budding Reagan, and the usually admirable Lou Stein's production thereupon turns from uneasy memories of "Day of the Locust" into a still more measy parody of "Of Thee I Sing." In short, "Wonderland" is an anachronistic mess, which is a pity because in there somewhere are one or two very good moments, mostly provided by Sandra Dickinson doing a Judy Holliday secretary and David Firth as the tight-lipped English innocent abroad.

the comment from the caricature.

The summer season at Stratford has opened with a remarkable rediscovery: George Farquhar's "The Twin Rivals," written in 1702 but not seen since it was boosed off a stage in Bath in 1812 for its immorality. This suggests an unusually perspicacious au-dience, since on the face of it the play is about the triumph of good over evil and innocence over corruption; yet beneath that of-ficial surface there is, as John Caird's new production at the Royal Shakespeare Company's Other Place marvelously indicates, a sly set of alternative values in operation, so that the evening ends distinctly on the side of villainy. The plot concerns twin brothers, Benjamin and Hermes Wouldbe; Hermes is upright, brave and gone for a soldier while Benjamin, hunehbacked and evil, usurps Hermes' house and fortune with the help of a superbly macabre lawyer. The twins' father having died. it is necessary to establish that the last words to have come from his mouth named Benjamin as heir rather than the firstborn Hermes: there is, however, remarks the lawyer, no need for the words to have been actually spoken. Accordingly, in a scene worthy of both Ben Travers and Charles Addams, the late father's teeth are pried open with a chisel so that a piece of paper may be inserted and then withdrawn from his mouth bearing the required will and testament.

Nothing in the rest of "The Twin Rivals" quite lives up to those black heights, and there has been a curious decision by the designer Ultz to dress Benjamin in a white ballerina costume, which pushes the rest of the plot into the outer realms of fantasy instead of rooting it in a street-wise awareness of 18th-century London immorality; the rest of the production is therefore largely carried by Miriam Karlin, whose Mrs. Mandrake doubles as procuress and midwife - thereby, as she proudly notes, providing a complete pregnancy service from start to finish.

In her performance, as in that of Mike Gwilym as the comically evil Benjamin, are indications of how much tougher and stronger this production would be if given threedimensional sets and plausible costumes. In its own eccentric way it is a sort of Threepenny Opera," a hymn to lechery and avarice turned reluctantly into an anthem of virtue, and such superlatively comic notions as that of a twin trying to convince his father that his brother is a bastard tend to get lost in the morass of white sheeting and orange boxes apparently left over from Trevor Nunn's "Macbeth." Still, Malcolm Ranson's wonderfully elongated and joky fights are alone almost worth the journey to Warwick-

Film Censorship

South Africa Eases Bars

By Nocl Hughes

TOHANNESBURG - After years of strict censorship, full frontal nudity and four-letter words are no longer taboo in films screeped in South Africa. Critics had long complained about the censors' heavy-handed treatment, which they said frequently ruined good films. But a new attitude has emerged, and South Africans are seeing virtually uncut versions of films.

Stanley Kubrick's "The Shin-ing," in which a woman steps out of her bath, and "Raging Bull" and "McVicar," which feature strong language once regarded as undesirable in South Africa cinemas, are among the recent films passed by the censors.

There has been no official anpouncement of a change in policy by the Directorate of Publications, which rules on the "desirability" of novels and plays as well as films.

But Carry Ronge, director of the Johannesburg Film Festival, said he believed the directorate had realized that film audiences had become more sophisticated. "I think that, over the years, they have allowed certain things through and then seen the response," he said.

Film reviewer Henry Dom said the censors and the public were "maturing together. The public has realized that violence, nudity and swearing can be part of any good

Perhaps most surprising, in a racially segregated country where sex across the color line is a crime, was the showing of a film in which a black man and a white woman were seen in bed together in a sequence that included full nudity. The basis of South Africa's censorship legislation is the 1974 Publications Act, which is administered by the Interior Ministry. Under the law, such diverse subjects as nudity, drugs and blasphemy were declared taboo.

Appeals against a banning of a film or publication go to the Publications Appeals Board, a body that is appointed by the state president and that sits as a court. The board's decisions are final.

Every week the directorate issues a long list of newly banned items, which may range from a treatise on Marxism to the latest Playboy magazine. But there have also been several recent announcements of "unbannings." These include the novel "The Godfather," and "Gentlewoman," a collection of nude studies.

The new freedom is still restricted. For example, no South African newspaper would dare publish a close-up photograph exposing a white woman's nipples, although a black woman's nipples are permissible. The Johannesburg Sunday Times newspaper regularly publishes "girlie" photos, but the mod-

Denis Bieber, a distributor of home video movies, said the censors' attitude is becoming increasingly relaxed. "The committees which review films are slowly coming out of the dark ages into this century," he said Kevin Hyson, a film distributor. said: "We have noticed in the last year or so that there has been a relaxation, most notably on the question of dialogue 'Raging Bull' is probably the perfect example. In that sort of environment [boxing] there is probably a considerable amount of swearing. To replace it with 'golly,' 'gosh' or 'wow' would not give a true idea of what is in-

Martha van der Westhuizen a member of the publications board. said the censors had become more tolerant of sex and swearing in films. But she said the board was still "rather sensitive as regards the safety of the state."

She said the censors had recently banned the film "Cuba" because "it shows the [pro-Castro] rebels in a favorable light." The Bernardo Bertolucci film "1900" was banned because it presented Communists similarly, and "The Exorcist" was considered blasphemous.

'New' Mozart Played in U.S.

By Fred Farris

International Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON — New York's Mostly Mozart Festival gave the U.S. premiere, at Washington's Kennedy Center, of a long-lost symphony written by Mozart at age 9. The performance of the 10-minute composition. Symphony in F major, K.19a, was the highlight of a brilliant program Wednesday. The New York group is participating this week in the first Kennedy Center Festival of Festivals, which extends through the summer.

President Reagan heard the rediscovered symphony at a special performance on the White House lawn. Written in London in was found Feb. 12 in the Bavarian State Library in Munich Its first performance since the 18th century was on May 17 in Munich.

The work has generally simple harmonies but occasionally breaks into chromatic harmonic changes that foreshadow later works.

Evocative 'Ghost Dances' Staged by Ballet Rambert

By Nocl Goodwin onal Revald Tribune

ONDON - South American victims of oppression through the ages, and the folk songs of different countries there, furnish an eloquent theme for "Ghost Dancthe latest work by Ballet Rambert's associate choregorapher, Christopher Bruce. It was premiered by the company on tour at the Theatre Royal, Bristol, before their visit next week to the Venice Dance Festival, where they have three performances at Venice's Teatro Malibran.

The new ballet is no political tract, but a largely successful attempt to convey poetically an emo-tional depth of feeling and to evoke a sense of compassion for figures of human tragedy. The ghost dancers are three male figday they began to practice a duct together." ures in skull masks, guarding some desolate land of the dead, as if looking out from a cave over a rock-strewn plateau. Here they greet a group of peasant charac-ters, presumably the latest victims, all of whom reveal something of themselves before passing on into

A suite of dances for two, three or more dancers among the eight victims," the "Ghost Dances" look back on love and innocence and lost joys, in choregoraphy of unforced flow and subtle differ-ences of character. There is, for instance, a touchingly affecting love duet, danced by Frances Carty and Paul Melis, and another of more adolescent vulnerability between Diane Walker and Guy Detot. The skull-mask dancers intrude on these and the other ensemble numbers to claim their victims and bring them to their destiny. Belinda Scarlett's costume designs are notably successful in suggesting Peru or neighboring regions, while the resident orchestra under Nicholas Carr skillfully turns ethnic to play panpipes, reed flutes and guitars in Carr's own arrangements from the folk song re-cordings of the group Inti-Illiami. "Ghost Dances" holds sentiment, sound and image in ideal balance, and should have a continuing success in the Rambert repertory.

A work by the veteran choregorapher Antony Tudor, "Sun-flowers," created at New York's Juilliard School in 1971 and not previously seen in London, was the first-night centerpiece of a group billed as "Ballet Stars of America." Martine van Hamel and eight other dancers, mostly from the American Ballet Theatre and the Joffrey Ballet, have formed a touring group that this week winds up the American Dance Season at Sadler's Wells.

Some of the dancers are known here from visits with their parent companies, but the kind of repertory suited to a small group seems hardly the best showcase for their talents. Four rather mediocre party pieces contributed by five of the dancers were a poor opening to the program, but the Tudor ballet, involving lighthearted passing affairs between four girls and two men to a string quartet by Janacek, had more rewarding choreographic po-etry, capably danced. Christian Holder and van hamel, as the Moor and his wife, lead a revival of José Limón's classic "The Moor's Pavane" (1949) with Gary Chryst and Lise Houlton as the lago and Emilia figures in this marvelously stylized distil-lation of the Othello tragedy to a suite of Purcell music. The dancing had an assured formality, but there is little dramatic tension between the characters to give it spirit.

Canadian Banks Get Full Status in New York Seek Accord

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Five major Canadian banks have received permanent licenses to engage in full-service banking in New York after having been prohibited from engaging in consumer banking activities there.

Until Wednesday's action, Canadian banks had confined their New York activities primarily to money market functions because state law bars the granting of full-service privileges to foreign banks from countries that do not offer comparable reciprocal privileges to New York The state's banking department changed its policies earlier this year following Canada's decision last year to allow U.S. banks to operate there. The five banks are the Bank of Montreal, the Toronto-Dominion Bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Union Oil of California to Sell Canadian Firm New York Times Service

CALGARY, Alberta — Union Oil of Canada has been put on the auction block by its parent, Union Oil of California, as experts estimated the current value of the Canadian subsidiary at $1.25 billioo to $1.67

The parent company announced Wednesday that it had completed the redemption of 2 million common shares of Union Canada at a cost of about $108.3 million in order to deal directly with potential purchasers. Union Canada sources said that conditions for the sale were being negotiated and that a deal might be made before autumn.

Sources in Los Angeles, home of the parent company, said Wednesday that the $65 per-share valuation placed on the redemption bid "reflects the value we attach to the Canadian operations." Potential buyers include the Canadian government-owned company, Petro-Canada; the Nova and Alberta Corp., and Dome Petroleum.

Cities Service Leases Pull Possible Suitors

New York Times Service NEW YORK - In the fastpaced, big-money world of oil company mergers, a name that has been in the news with increased frequency is Cities Service, the Tulsa, Okla., energy conglomerate and 20th-largest U.S. oil company.

other company."

When asked whether Cities Service was ruling out all possible mergers, a company spokesman re-plied: "Yes."

New York Times Service
OTTAWA — The opposition Progressive-Conservative Party has accused the government of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau of breaking its antitrust laws in allowing an international uranium cartel of which Canada was a member to fix domestic and world

The Conservatives also demanded Wednesday that the government release a secret report that led to the indictment Tuesday of six companies on charges of restraining trade in uranimum to Canada But Justice Minister Jean Chretien rejected the demand, saying that in laying charges he had followed the recommendations of the Ministry of Consumer Affairs report, which called only for the

Mr. Trudeau said his government had carried out a legal action in forming the cartel to 1972 with Australia, France and South Africa. ca as "a defense mechanism against United States actions." A ban hy Washington on uranium imports had caused worldwide nies seeking extensive U.S. acreage for oil and gas exploration. Cities Service has 10.4 million undeveloped leasehold acres — the fifth-largest holding in the United - including in the rich Overthrust Belt. The company also has natural gas reserves of 3.1 trillion cubic feet. Already Mesa Petroleum, which ments, has bought at least 1 percent of Cities Service's outstanding shares. And Nu-West Group, a Canadian real estate and oil company, recently purchased 7.2 percent. Cities Service, however, has sued to block the Nu-West sale.

"Cities has lots tif acreage in the Overthrust area that's the main ioterest," said Carey E. Tharp, an oil analyst with Stillman, Maynard & Co. "It's a big asset-value compa-oy. The assets of the company would be worth well over $100 a share if the company is liquidat-

It is for this reason that Cities Service's shares have been climbing in beavy volume from $49.875 July 1 to $55.75 Wednesday.

This gain came despite the drop in first-quarter earnings to $57.7 million from $170.1 million a year-earlier. Revenues inched up to $2.3 billion from $2.2 billion.

Follow the Leaders

"It's a self-fulfilling prophecy." said Joseph S. Clark Jr., first vice president at Wertheim & Co. Mesa bought a position and Nu-West bought a position. These are two smart groups attracted to the asset. That leads a lot of other iovestors to be attracted."

Cities Service is not without flaws. Despite its extensive unde-veloped acreage, it has yet to make a major oil find. Its own oil reserves produce only about 30 percent of its petroleum oceds, below industry averages.

Refinery earnings are down; and Cities Service has few retail outlets and sells its product largely to wholesalers, making margins on its refined oil even slimmer.

Its chemical division has been operating at a loss for two years, and earnings at its mineral division have fallen since 1979. In May, Cities Service announced it would sell most of its mineral division, a copper operation and an industrial chemical division, and plow the proceeds toto oil and gas.

While this move will raise cash, the company still faces a heavy debt burden. Debt represents about 35 percent of Cities Service's total capitalization, compared with an industry average of 25 to 30

Analysts say one reason why Cities Service has not lived up to its potential is the numerous highlevel management shake-ups over the years. As a result, the company has failed to develop a clear-cut corporate strategy and has not directed more funds into explaining its domestic acreage, they reason.

OECD Sees Delay in Economic Upturn

By Carl Gewirtz International Herald Tribune

PARIS - The semi-annual Economic Outlook put out by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, normally a tough talking document, refused to take sides in the issues dividing Western policy-makers in its summer report published Thursday and said basically what already is ell known.

The subuitle of the report, "Delayed Recovery," says it all. The timing of the West's economic upturm, which in December's report w.s forecast for the first balf of this year, has been "delayed by six months or

The report, which covers the next 18 months, says, "the picture is less huoyant than suggested last autumn," adding that when the recovery gets underway it will be "modest" and accompanied by inflation and unemployment "which are too high, yet hard to reduce."

Overall, the report makes less exciting

That currently is not the case and the OECD secretariat has directed its efforts away from the general reader and toward its member governments who are engaged in a heated polemic over the high-interest-rate policy of the United States. The aim of the OECD report is to defuse the arguments; but oowbere does the report attempt to come to grips with the basic argument over whether the long fight against inflation needs to be replaced with an urgent program to stimulate employment.

The low-keyed tone of the report is a function of the fact that — as the OECD's chief economist admitted at a news conference the secretarial bas come up with "no re-sounding conclusion" to the question of whether a better overall performance would be attainable with a change in the mix of fiscal and monetary policies.

voice in resolving the dispute, Sylvia Ostry, who was also chief author of the report, argued that the aim was "to increase the understanding of the complicated transmission methods" of how interest rates affect exchange rates, which together affect overall economic performance.

Choices 'Limited'

The aim, she emphasized, was "to increase understanding by emphasizing that recent events are not the sole determinants — there is a past inheritance — and 10 make clear that policy choices on both sides of the Atlantic are very limited, the road is extremely narrow and there is only limited room for

It may make for dull reading, she allowed, but "there are no simple answers. The situation is too complicated for simple, neat solu-

Mrs. Ostry characterized the impact of the dollar's appreciation on European countries as equal to the sbock of a new rise in oil prices, as indeed it is since most oil is billed

In the six months ended in June, the report notes, the dollar's effective exchange rate has increased 21 percent against the Deutsche mark, 24 percent against the Freneb franc, 19 percent against the British pound and the Swiss franc and 27 percent against the lira. This lost purchasing power, dollar terms, should add about 1.1 percent to the basic rate of inflation in Europe this year and a further 2.2 percentage points next year, the report states.

In analyzing why rates have moved so sharply, the report notes: "There does not seem to be any simple, systematic explanation for recent exchange rate developments The usual main determinants - monetary conditions, interest rate differentials, current-account developments and relative price performance - have not played their usual

The influence of inflation differentials has been uncharacteristically small, or oper-ated with considerable delay, the dominant role being played by monetary conditions and current-account developments," the report states. "Noneconomie factors may also have been important at times. As a result, exchange rate variations not only have done little to offset differences in price performance, but also have amplified them, leading to important changes in compedove posi-

The report sees no early easing of tight monetary policy and, as a result, domestic demand, especially in Europe, "is expected to be muted" and unemployment, already at post-war records, will continue to climb.

The big question is whether the social pressures stemming from such high rates of joblessness — youth unemployment in France, Britain and Italy are seen at over 20 percent — will force government officials to abandon the current strategy of fighting in-flation for policy aimed at boosting employment. The report does not go near this de-bate, which is being led by the France's new Socialist government

On the unstated assumption that governments withstand the social pressures, the report states that Europe's recovery will be fueled by a recovery in exports which would have been the result of the exchange rate changes making the prices of those goods very competiove on world markets.

N.Y. Prices Up on News Of Takeovers

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed higher Thursday, with takeover candidates sparking the rally.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 5.52 points to close at 959.00. Advances outpaced declines three to two as turnover reached 45 million shares.

Analysts said the gain was large-ly a "technical bounce" from the market's oversold condition, but they noted investors were encouraged by the Federal Reserve's actions to add liquidity to the banking system, which they said could indicate the Fed is easing monetary policy slightly.

In Washington, Treasury Secre-tary Donald Regan said he still expects a lower prime rate and lower interest rates by the end of the year and he did oot rule out a single-digit prime rate in 1982. However, he expressed disappointment that most major U.S. hanks raised their prime lending rate Wednes-day a half poiot to 20½ percent.

What makes Trade Development Bank exceptional? To start with, there is our policy of concentrating on things we do unusually well. For example, trade and export financing, foreign exchange and banknotes, money market transactions and precious metals.

Geographically, too, we work mainly in areas where we have something special to offer. This includes the U.S.A. where our subsidiary, Republic National Bank of New York, is one of America's 30 largest banks, It also includes a number of less familiar countries, where our exceptional knowledge of local conditions can be an important advantage for clients. What's more, we keep our back-

While we move fast in serving our clients, we're distinctly traditionalist in our basic policies. At the heart of our business is the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also well-diversified, and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertain times.

RIUNIONE ADRIATICA SICURT MHAN - ITALY

The Company's Accounts for the year ended December 31, 1980 were approved at its Annual General Meeting held on June 30, 1981 with Mr. Ettore Lolli in the chair. These Accounts mark a significant yardstick on which the company's future performance can be measured, as they provide the first combined figures of both Riuniooe Adriatica di Sicurtà and L'Assicuratrice Italiana following the merger of this former subsidiary into RAS.

Results achieved to the Company's various lines of business are reviewed in detail in the Directors' Report.

Overall premium income from direct insurances amounted to Lit. 831.9 bn. Of this total, Lit. 459.7 bp. was attributable to direct premiums written in Italy, where volume rose by 19.3% in the individual life account, 20% in the Fire Account, 24.4% to the Motor Liability Account, 34% in the General Motor Account, 20.6% in the Personal Accident Account, 24% in the General Liability Account, and 21% in the Theft Account.

Loss ratios were maintained at acceptable levels in virtually all the Company's principal lines.

Proposals were adopted to pay a divi-dend of Lit. 1,400 per share (1979: Lit. 1,200), and also for a scrip issue of Unione Subalpioa di Assicurazioni shares to be allotted to all RAS's existing shareholders to mark the special occasion of the merger.

Elections were also made to the Statutory Audit Committee, on the expiry of its three-year term of office, while Lord Thorneycroft was formally elected to the Board following his earlier cooption as 5 Director.

The dividend is payable as from July 21, 1981 and the scrip stock will also be allotted as from that date.

West Germany is also seen maintaining one of the lowest rates of inflation, with consumer prices forecast to rise 51/2 percent this year and only 4 percent next year. However, a major imponderable is whether the untested "supplyside" economics of the Reagan adminstration will perform as touted. In its first public comment on the program, the OECD is clearly doubtful that the objectives can be achieved. The administration is forecasting a growth rate of about 5 percent next year while the OECD fears the outcome could actually be a decline of 0.5 percent if the worst possible outcome devel-

Three-month Treasury bills were trading at 15.20 percent Thursday.

The "optimistic alternative" — real GNP next year of 3 percent, inflation at 7 percent — sees the Tfourth quarter of 1982 from the forecast 12 percent at the end of this year. Its "pessimistic" scenario puts these rates at 18 percent.

This is the first time the OECD has attempted to forecast interest rates — a reflection of just how crucial the evolution of U.S. inter-

Scoring Financial Touchdowns on 'Pure' Option Plays

By Vartanig G. Vartan New York Times Service

NEW YORK — In the high-risk game of call options, there is nothing like the "pure play" to excite a speculator. In simplest terms, this involves the purchase of a call giv-ing its holder the right to buy 100 shares of the underlying stock at a set price until the call expires.

During the last several weeks, a dazzling array of takeover bids — and rumors of takeovers — for natural-resource companies bas sent certain call options soaring.

On Tuesday, for example, the commoo stock of Texasgulf jumped 6% points, to 53%, topping the volume list on the New York Stock Exchange. On the same day, a single call for Texasgulf almost matched the increase in the slock, point for point, while racking up a much larger percentage gain. This was the option, traded on the Chi-cago Board Options Exchange, to buy in August 100 shares of stock and an earlier bid for Conoco, a at a price of $35 each. The August call option that was languishing 35 call ran ahead 612, to 19%.

Both the common stock and the options of Texasgulf were respond-ing that day to a sweetened bid for the company from France's Elf Aquitaine group. The offer for Texasguil's common stock was raised to $56 a share from $50.

Before the latest takeover fever, the breathtaking possibilities can be seen — with the advantage of hindsight — lurking in the options game. During the week of June 1, this same Texasgull option, which expires after the third Friday in August, traded as low as 34.

A bid that created excitement elsewhere was announced Monday for Conoco, the nation's ninth-largest oil company. Du Pont of-fered $87.50 a share in cash for 40 percent of Conoco's stock and 1.6 Du Pont shares for each remaining share of Conoco. If carried to com pletion, with an estimated value of 7.3 billion, it would rank as the call option that was languishing oear the zero level not so long ago has performed in dazzling fashion.

This particular item, trading oo the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, is the July 70 call option for Conoco. As its designation implies, this contract permits owners to pur-chase Conoco's stock at $70 a share at any time during the life of the option, which expires after the close of trading oo July 17.

What happened was that, over the course of 10 trading days, this particular option rose 124 times in value. Ooe Manhattan stockbroker summed up Wall Street's senti-ment: "Unreal."

On Friday, June 19, the option closed at one sixteenth. In Wall Street language, that's known phooetically as "a steenth." That same day, Conoco's common stock fin-ished at 56%. Although the stock rose 1% that Friday, the option was hardly in demand. WITHIN THE WHIRLWIND

By Eugenia Ginzburg. Translated from the Russian by Ian Holand. Introduction by Heinrich Boll. A Helen and Kurt Wolff Book. 423 pp. $17.50. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 757 Third Ave., New York 10017. Reviewed by John Leonard

NOBODY wants to hear anything more about Kolyma, the pits of Siberia, the worst of the slave-camp islands in the Gulag Archipelago. In-conveniently, Eugenia Ginzburg is here with the second volume of her memoirs, this one published posthu-mously. Isn't it amazing how inconvenient these difficult witnesses are? William F. Buckley Jr. and Irving Kristol are just as inconvenienced by a Jacobo Timerman as Jean-Paul Sartre and Simone de Beauvoir were in-convenienced by an André Gide and an Arthur Koestler and an Albert Camus. What if the future not only doesn't work, but also glows in the dark like a scar of the past? Why won't the Ancient Mariner please shut up and eat his albatross?

For readers nofamiliar with Ginzburg's first book of autobiogra-phy, "Journey Into the Whirlwind" phy, "Journey Into the Whiriwing (1967), she was a teacher and a member of the Communist Party in the Soviet Union when, in 1937, she was arrested as a "terrorist." Her terrorism consisted of having failed to denounce a colleague for various and spurious "Trotskyite" sins. She spent the next 18 years in the arctic, felling trees, quarrying lime, oursing syphilities, fending off rape, stealing bread crumbs, reciting poetry and losing her husband and her first-born son. She died four years ago, unpublished in her own country.

By Poetry and Love

"Journey" ended in 1939. "Within" continues until 1955. Ginzburg had hoped to publish the account of what she had endured in the Soviet Union, which perhaps accounts for a certain deference and double-speak in "Journey": Stalin was the one and only bad guy. By the uniddle of the 70s, she obviously realized that oothing she wrote would be published unless in the West. She is tougher, in "Within," on Lenin, on the party and on the ra-tionalized paranoia that made the Gu-lag imaginable. Those who hadn't been worked to death were starved and the bodies chucked ioto snowbanks to wait for the spring rains to wash away the bones.

What elevates "Within" to literature is Ginzburg's extraordinary sense of character and narrative. We are fed up with atrocities; there is too much albanoss. But when we have been made to know the atrocious - this one means well, that one is honest we gag. And what saved Ginzburg is so bizarre, so impossibly romantic, that it belongs either in a bad Hollywood movie or in a good Russian novel. She is saved by poetry, particularly the poems of Blok, and by love. Of course, the man she finds to love is bald and German and Catholic, Dr. Anton Walter also makes jokes, Because this is, in a way, another Russian novel, we know in advance that each joke is another loop in the noose that hangs us. Imagine 18 years of malnutrition, frostbite, indifference and murder, for such crimes as failing to speak or burning a letter. Isn't this Gogol? It is, indeed. In fact, there is a young wom-an who comes to resemble Gogol just before she hangs herself. Imagine an etiquette that rations out the precious crust of bread, every night in a cold hell. Isn't this Dostoevski? Punctilious about degradations? Imagine luck de-fined as a kind of Russian loophole: slackness, good nature or the famous (hand-washing) "maybe." Isn't this second-rate Chekhov? So was life, for millions of the giggling dead.

Ginzburg individualizes without forgiving. She sees through the eyes of the unlikely survivors, seeking their certificates of "rehabilitation," "the sane expression of omniscience and extreme exhaustion." On the 20th cen-nury, Blok had it right: "More homeless still, a haze where terrors hide be-yond our ken." How amazing that the century didn't break her beart; it was, however, bent out of shape and had to be stitched together as if from the threads of those bags of flour. Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn, in his magisterial account of the Gulag, left out sex. He is another difficult witness. Ginzburg establishes sex in Ko-lyma as yet another Russian loophole and another noose; the results of sex were the children of the damned. They died like candles before the room was warm. Solzhenitsyn, contemptuous, would not absolve. Ginzburg, afflicted with scruple, re-members the vagrant kindness, the decency that came as a surprise.

She is not, as a witness, without her own difficulties. She despised the criminal class with which she had to engage. She isn't much easier on the peasants, although she finds the usual gusto here and the redeeming virtue there. She would have always preferred the company of her own kind — the intelligentsia — who used words the truck driver couldn't understand. She knew all this, though, be-fore she died. She knew the difference between heroism and victimization. She was the least prudish of elitists; her New Class let her down.

Timerman, in "Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number," speaks of the intimacy of victims and speaks of the intimacy of victims and victimizers: "We're part of the same humanity, colleagues in the same endeavor," Ginzburg, similarly, speaks of "the egotism of those who suffer"; it is probably "even more all-embracing than the self-regard of those who are humanity." In horacome the difficulty are happy." In between the difficult witnesses is liberal guilt. This soul-shriving book makes me wonder what's wrong with liberal guilt? And where, when we need it, is a little bit of neo-conservative guilt?

Prado Expects to Get 'Guernica' in Autumn

BRIDGE

MOST of the great figures in the history of bridge have been, in some fashion, professionals. In the United States the most notable exception is surely Waldemar Von Zedtwitz, who celebrated his 85th birthday in Hawaii recently and who might be called the Great Amateur. His interests extend to art, philosophy, mathematics, chess, history and lexicography, in all of which he was an amateur without being in the least amateurish. As a young man Von Zedtwitz won auction tournaments. He became the favorite partner of Harold Vanderbilt after the railroad tycoon introduced contract bridge to American socity in 1925. For 40 years he gave his considerable talents to bridge administration, in New York, at the national level and eventually in the World Bridge Federation: He belped the American Contract Bridge League through a difficult period of reorganization, and worked diligently on the laws of the game. The climax to his long and successful playing career came in 1970 in Stockholm when he overcame the handicap of failing eyesight to win the world mixed pair title at the age of 73. Four years later he was a member of a team that finished fourth in the world mixed team championship. It is likely, though, that his favorite memory of the game is a much older one: the dramatic finale to the 1932 Vanderbilt Team Championship. He was playing with the donor of the tro-phy, and they were generally regarded as the slowest pair of players to be found anywhere. They were also among the best-dressed in a bygone age when some players were tails and the proceedings were followed by society editors.

When the last deal of the final came along at Von Zedtwitz's table, the other players had long completed their play. They were huddled around the scoring table in a corner of the room. The tournament director was a young West Point lieutenant named Alfred Gruenther, later to be famous as chief of staff in World War II. Quietly he told the cluster of players what they wanted to know: "The Vanderbilt team has to make a game to win,"

"Impossible," chorused the kibitzers and other players who knew the hand. It certainly seemed unlikely that game would be reached, or that it could be made, but they reckoned without Von Zedtwitz. He bid his dia-

_By Alan Truscott monds at his second turn after his partner had doubled an opening heart bid and East had raised. Most players with the North hand would feel they had done all they could by doubling, but Vanderbilt raised aggressively to four diamonds. This was all the encouragement Von Zedtwitz needed. He bid five diamonds, and West led the heart king and shifted to the spade three. As the sequel demonstrated, he should have sequel demonstrated, he should have shifted to a trump.

When deep in thought Von Zedtwitz invariably pulled his ear, a habit he eventually replaced, on medical advice, with tugging on a lock of hair. On this occasion, after even more ear-pulling than usual, he played the spade jack. East won with the ace, another delicate error, and returned the heart ten, forcing dummy to ruff.

It would not have helped the defense for East to return a trump, for fense for East to return a trump, for South could win in his hand, ruff a heart and work on clubs. The alternaove of a spade return would allow a careful cross-ruff to succeed. As it was South cashed the club ace and ruffed a club. He ruffed another heart in dummy, ruffed another club and drew trumps.

That left the spade king and two club winners in dummy, so the game was made. The result was immediately known and there was a burst of cheering something rarely heard in those dignified days or since. The Great Amateur had helped his partner win his own trophy for the first time.

Neither side was vulnerable. The bid-West 17 Pass 2 V Pass 40

The Associated Press HASSELT, Belgium — Freddy Maertens of Belgium led the pack across the finish line in a time of 4:01.20 to win Thursday's 15th leg of the Tour de France bicycle race. The race was over a flat, 157-kilometer (97.3-mile) course from Beringen. Ovett Falls Short Of 1,500 Mark By .59 Seconds

United Press International MILAN — Steve Ovett of Britain missed breaking his world 1,500-meter record by .59 seconds in heavy rain at a meet here Wednesday night — a clocking identical to one by compatriot Sebastian Coe under perfect cooditions in a Stockholm meet the night before.

Overt, having recovered from a recent throat infection, was out to run his first fast 1,500 meters of the year. Beaten only twice at that distance in the past four years, Ovett's 3:31.95 made him a nearly four-second winner over 1976 Olympic champion John Walker of New Zealand. Ovett's and Coe's clockings were more than 3.5 seconds faster than anyone else has run the 1500 in 1981. In an all-U.S. 100-meter final here, James Sanford nipped Stanley Floyd at the tape; both were clocked in 10.14, with Carl Lewis third in 10.22.

Edwin Moses continued his four-year undefeated steak in the 400-meter hurdles, his 48.35 clocking being his third fastest this year.

Banks' Big Triple STOCKHOLM, (AP) — Willie Banks of the United States Wednesday night recorded a triple jump of 57 feet, 7 inches (17.55 meters), the third longest in history, at the conclusion of a two-day meet here. The only other man to jump farther is Joso de Oliveira of Brazil who went 58-814 six years ago, Banks' effort was half an inch short of the U.S. record he set two lateral sporting events between the nations in the Soviet Union.

He cited a February, 1980, visit to Moscow of a U.S. amateur boxing team and a March, 1980, visit to Leningrad of a U.S. decathlon tearn. Those visits took place after Carter had requested the Olympic boycott but before the boycott was agreed to and proclaimed by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

"Up until Jan. 20, the [Carter] administration was still making a concerted effort to keep athlet from going over there. I don't think anyone has recently taken a look at the policy.... It probably got lost by the wayside," remarked another department spokesman, who said the boycott issue bad been discussed hriefly at the de-partment's daily hriefing Wednes-

Officials of The Athletics Congress, the U.S. track and field authority, said they were surprised to find last-minute opposition to a meet that has been scheduled for more than six months.

"To the best of my knowledge," said Martin Weiss, TAC's director of communications, "this is the first time the subject's come up." The United States won the last U.S.-Soviet meet, 190-177. three years ago in Berkeley, Calif., but could be hard-presssed to repeat the victory because many top stars will not be competing this time.

Club Denies Membership To McEnroe

The Associated Press LONDON -- Wimbledon champioo John McEnroe will not be invited to become a member of the All-England Lawn Tennis Club, its championship committee announced

Thursday, because his on-court behavior has "brought the game into disrepute." The club's decision followed a number of outbursts hy the 22-year-old American during this year's tournament, which ended Saturday. He further an-gered the Wimbledon establishment by failing to attend the champions' hall after his championship victory over Bjorn

Bore

A committee statement said: "In the past, it has normally been the custom to elect the winners of the singles championships as honorary members of the All-England Club for their services to the game of lawn tennis.

"This year, bowever, the committee has decided not to elect Mr. John McEnroe a member at the present time in view of his behavior on court in certain matches which, in their opinion, brought the game into disrepute."

The Offenses

In various matches, McEnroe was fined a total of $2,250 and was given peoalty points and public warnings for such of-fenses as calling one official "an incompetent fool," accusing a linesman of racial hias and repeated complaints about umpires' calls.

The tournament committee has recommended that the Men's International Professional Tennis Council assess McEnroe additional fines totaling $12,500.

McEnroe faces a possible suspension of up to one year if the council ratifies all the fines. Earlier this week McEnroe had been reported as saying: "Am I going to be the first champion in 100 years they don't invite to be a member? I don't think even Wimhledon will try to do that to me."

Jim Carroll

The Rocky Road of a 'Catholic Boy' Through Vergil, Basketball, Heroin and the Beat Poets

By Michael Zwerin

sational Herald Tribune PARIS - Diary entry: "I'm riding uptown on the 'A' train. There's this chick, a real secretary-stewardess type — and here she is tossing this spread so wide I can see her powder blue panties - Finally I got up and went over to her and asked ber if she could please close her legs. I'm barely 15 years old and it's distracting and, frankly, lewd."

Jim Carroll's high-scoring book "The Basketball Diaries." which has sold more than 200,000 copies since it was reissued in paperback in 1980, recounts his life between the ages of 12 and 15 (1963-66). When exerpts first appeared in The Paris Review, Jack Kerouac said: "At the age of 13, Jim Carroll wrote better prose than 89 percent of today's novelists.

The Carrolls moved from the East 20s to Washington Heights.

Diary entry: "Here in upper Manhartan, guys jump off eliffs into the Harlem River, herense where the water is literally s- because right nearby are the giant sewer deposits where about half a million toilets empty their goods daily."

'Sissy Stuff'

After he was kicked out of a Catholic school ("I wasn't the kind of kid who liked nums"), his basketball smarts won him a scholarship to "this posh private place, Trinity School in the West 90s by the park, and I got into poetry." His accent is 300 percent New York: "Poetry was considered sissy stuff where I grew up. I was already interested in writing though. I wanted to be a sports writer. I had this brother, he clipped out Red Smith and Arthur Daley sports columns and underlined the metaphors and similes." Carroll smoked grass before Latin class "to make my man Vergil more interesting." and he was mainlining heroin by the age of 15. This grew all-consuming between 1974, when his book of poetry "Living at the Movies" was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize (he was 22), and 1980, when he recorded a rock record, "Catholic Boy."

He was in Paris recently to promote "Catholic Boy," released in Europe last month, on which he chants and recites more than sings (a sort of cross between Lou Reed and Garland Jeffreys), and which has also sold about 200,000 copies, not bad for a first

Poet Carroll: "They just died."

He hits you like "Catcher in the Rye" filtered through "Naked Lunch" by William Burroughs, who once mumbled something like: "That Carroll is really a born writer."

"Burroughs is a combination minister and carny barker." Carroll speaks in an even, unemotional voice that masks passion and energy, something like the way Bjorn Borg plays tennis. "We were at this Buddhist place Colorado where Allen Ginsberg has his Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics, I think he calls it. Ginsberg had all his friends there, Gregory Corso was there.

"There was this little guy running around the school, he was like Ginsberg's guru, a real creep. He was chasing after all the boys and all the girls and he had his bodyguards and big Mercedes and Burroughs thought it was a big joke. Burrough had drunk about three bottles of vodka and he drawled with that raspy voice of his: 'Hey, I'm, what do you think about all these leisure-suit Tibetans?'

Chewing Sugar Cubes

Carroll was sitting in a CBS conference room in the Paris suburb of Neuilly-sur-Seine, chewing one sugar cube after another. Addicts, active or inactive, can never seem to get enough sugar. "I went on the methadone program and moved to a little town in Califormia and lived with two dogs, first time I ever had a dog in my life - I always wanted a dog. I didn't have a car and I was writing a

"I was living off getting straight. Metha-done is a really insidious drug, though; sure, it blocks heroin, but it can get you pretty high by itself. They put you on the largest possible dose to keep you smashed so you stay off the streets. Those 'connselors' — I call them accountants - all they care about is their statistics so they can collect the welfare subsidies. As long as you stay on the program you are part of their cure rate. "It's harder to kick methadone than three hours on a corner for The Man; you can run on your own time, not on The Man's

His eyes, hard and sensitive at the same time, look everywhere but into yours. He seemed to be trying to coax them toward contact, but they oever made it. He chainsmoked, his fingers are tobacco-stained, and his hand shook as he tried to lift a full coffee

'The Phil Rizzuto of Rock'

"Kids who read my book came up to me with smack," he said. He spent the first half of this year on the road with his new band; the road is a tough test for an inactive addict. "But I don't care about that any more. I don't care much about the psychological paraphernalia around rock — the backstage scene, the groupies, the drugs.

"I'm like the Phil Rizzuto of rock. Billy Martin used to say that when he was rooming with Rizzuto on the road with the New York Yankees, he'd just go to the hotel after a game, put on his pajamas, watch Bilko on TV and speak to his wife on the phone. I read and call home.

"I'm just glad I didn't get into rock when I was 19 — if I had been making some money then I would have been dead at 19 and a quarter. From "People Who Died," the hit of his

Those are people who died, who died Those are people who died, died Those are people who died, who died Those are people who died, died They were all my friends,

He used to baby-sit for painter Larry Riv-ers' children. Night after night he listened to the Velvet Underground. The late New York poet Frank O'Hara first interested him in poetry. Patti Smith encouraged him to write songs and sing them. He hung out with Andy Warhol and Burroughs. Then this wild street child of the New York anti-establishment creative establishment "became a loner in California." "I thought it would change when I moved back to New York but it didn't, and you know, my wife always wants me to go out; she says: You're a rock 'n' roll star now. people always recognize you, we get into the clubs for free and people buy us drinks.
